Waggener High School, Class of 1961 Scrapbook, 3rd. Edition

This is one of many sections that contain information, photos, newspaper articles, internet items, etc. of the St. Matthews area and especially of Waggener High School. Many of the items came from Al Ring's personal collections but many people have helped and I have tried to give credit where I can.

The purpose of this "collection" was to create the history of Waggener and the students and teachers who were there during my time. Being retired I now have time to do many of the things I have always wanted, this project is just one of them. The collection is continuing today, so if you should have old or new information on the St. Matthews area from 1950 to 1962 or Waggener High, please contact Al Ring.

All graphics have been improved to make the resolution as good as possible, but the reader should remember that many came from copies of old newspaper articles and photos. Credit to the source of the photos, etc. is provided whenever it was available. We realize that many items are not identified and regret that we weren't able to provide this information. As far as the newspaper articles that are not identified, 99% of them would have to be from one of three possible sources. The Courier-Journal, The Louisville Times or one of the Voice publications. Books that we have used for some information include, Randy, Cactus, Uncle, Ed and the Golden age of Louisville Television, Waggener High School Alumni Directory 1996, Waggener Traditional High School Alumni Directory 2007, Memories of Fontaine Ferry Park, St. Matthews The Crossroads of Beargrass by Samuel W. Thomas, St. Matthews, 25 Years a City Two Centuries a Community, St. Matthews 1960-1995, Waggener Lair's 1958 to 1962, The Holy Warrior, Muhammad Ali.

Please use this information as a reference tool only. If the reader uses any of the information for any purpose other than a reference tool, they should get permission from the source.

Bunny Laffoon Dances Again After Illness

Nine-year-old Bunny Laffoon, making a courageous comeback from an attack of rheumatic fever, was one of 30 ballet dancers who performed at Memorial Auditorium Sunday.

Bunny was stricken in early 1952. She was confined to bed for eight months. She has been up and around only since December.

Karen Conrad and Pittman Carey, directors for the Louisville Dance Council, which staged the ballet, picked Bunny and the other ballet dancers out of 200 applicants.

Bunny, a fourth grader at O. J. Stivers Elementary School, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Laffoon, 304 North Hubbard Lane.

Margery Vogel, 4029 Wichester Road, an Eastern senior, also performed in the ballet. Others from this area were Teresa Horstman, 140 Pennsylvania, and Lois Bewley, 211 So. Peterson.

E-Mails to Marie VanHoose Sayre, May 2008:

I thought you might enjoy seeing our Boston, Sadie. She is a large Boston, weighing about 27 lbs. and is 4 years old.

How big is your dog? I loved the picture of him.

Bonnie

You have had quite a collection of Bostons. I love the names and their photos. They are fun dogs. Sadie is our first one and a bit larger than I thought that I wanted. She still considers herself a lap dog and will snuggle close if she can't get on your lap.

Bonnie

This is one of my favorite photos of Sadie. My son has a large fish tank in his living room and Sadie is fascinated with the fish. She will sit as long as we let her and watch the fish swim. When one gets close to the bottom she thinks she can catch it. We have to monitor her so she doesn't push on the tank. There is a bird cage in the family room (they also have a large dog, a cat and outside fish pond) so Sadie goes from one room to the next watching any movement. On our last visit she chased the cat through the house and almost knock my daughter-in-law over. Philip says their house is like going to Disney World for Sadie.

Local serviceman teaches in Japan

Coastguardsman John Bush of St. Matthews wanted more than postcard memories of Japan.

He wanted to remember something meaningful and human about the country after completing his tour of duty there.

So, John spent his leaves and spare time as a teacher and advisor at a village school.

Thus, he got a closeup view of the Japanese and came home with a bundle of memories that won't easily fade.

John was an electronics technician second class at an aid-to-navigation station near Urashoro in 1966 and early 1967.

After completing duties at the station, he would walk to the village school and meet with members of the English Speaking Club nearly every afternoon.

"A lot of the fellows stuck to the base, but I decided I wanted to find out as much as I could about the Japanese," said John.

John taught informally and covered such subjects as American sports, slang, Kentucky geography, and favorite Yankee foods.

In addition, he helped club members to learn to sing songs in English.

One of the first songs they learned was "Row Row Your Boat." They finally reached the point where they could manage selections from "Sound of Music."

Local serviceman teaches in Japan

Some confusion

One of the problems, he said, was that many of their textbooks were in Anglo-Saxon. The differences in British and American English sometimes confused both John and his students.

He said the Japanese place a high premium on education. They go to school five and a half days a week and their school days are longer. Many of them have an excellent reading knowledge of English by the time they are high school seniors. The club members had a please-teach-me attitude said John, and paid close attention to whatever he told them.

John's wife, Jane, spent a couple of months in Urashoro last summer.

"When I first came to the village, people followed me around and asked all kinds of questions," she said.

Later she found out she was the only American woman who had been in the area in recent years.

Mrs. Bush also taught. She set up teaching shop in her hotel room. The students came to her room after school hours to be filled in on American ways.

Wore uniforms

Johns said the students at the Urashoro school wore uniforms similar to sailor suits. Patches on their blouses showed their class rank.

One Saturday he joined the club members on a picnic by the ocean.

He said the picnic site was about 15 miles from the school and most of those who attended rode bikes to the ocean.

"Physical fitness is stressed so much there that even in their routine activities the Japanese manage to pay attention to their physical welfare."

While Jane was visiting, the couple toured a milk plant.

The guide understood their questions but could not answer them orally. So, he wrote the answer on a scratch pad.

Shopping easy

Shopping was easy. All the labels on canned and packaged goods had both English and Japanese labels.

American TV had invaded the scene, too. The villagers TV fare included "I Love Lucy," "Lost in Space," and "The Andy Williams Show."

John finished his Japanese tour May 17 and returned home for leave.

He and Jane are visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Bush, of 4007 Alton Rd. His next assignment will be in Cleveland, Ohio, at an electronics repair shop.

Structures with substance—Julie Ensor’s Feather Your Nest designs and build unique home meant to last for generations. Voice-Tribune Profile, by Mary Alan Woodward.

Houses are rising on their foundations in Forest School Estates, a new high-end development in Anchorage. A trickle of cars has begun driving through this growing neighborhood to view the architecture, which brings to mind English country homes and their New England counterparts.

What’s even more interesting than tile designs of these properties is their builder in an industry populated almost exclusively by men, Julie Ensor, co-owner of Feather Your Nest, is a rarity: She is a woman schooled in the finest traditions of both construction and interior design.

“My grandfather and my dad were in the building business before me,” she said. “My parents had four daughters, and my dad liquidated his part of the business because he didn’t believe any girl would want to be a builder. As things turned out, I did since my maiden name is Carpenter. I think it’s only fitting.”

Eastern elegance: Ensor grew up in Hurstbourne the daughter of Jack Carpenter and his wife Diane, who decorated the houses her husband built. Ensor occasionally went horseback riding with friends in Anchorage, where she gained an appreciation for what has been called its elegant casual’ lifestyle.

After graduating from Male High School in 1984, she earned a BA degree in interior design at the University of Kentucky four years later.

For several summers during her college years, she studied at the prestigious Rhode Island School of Design. After graduation, she moved to Washington, D.C., to begin her career under the wing of English interior designer Anthony Browne.

“While working with him, I fell in love with the East Coast, but also with England,” she said. “I developed an affinity for things such as English curtains which have a thick inner lining to keep out the cold. A lot of Anglophile things go on in my thought processes because of him.”

With Browne, Ensor renovated and redecorated famed talk-show host Oprah Winfrey’s English-style country estate in Rollin Prairie, Ind., and decorated composer Andrew Lloyd Webber’s Manhattan apartment.

Good bones: For the first two years of the 1990s Ensor worked in New York, first for fashion designer Ralph Lauren and then for interior designer Keller Donovan. For the latter she created interior designs for upscale apartments all the while learning more about what makes older architecture worth preserving.

But when her hometown beckoned, Ensor moved back to Louisville. For the rest of that decade, she was an interior designer at Bittners.

Although I loved doing the interior design aspect of homes, I realized that what I preferred was doing the bones’ of the house,” she said. “If the house doesn’t have good bones, it’s hard to make it look pretty.”

Ensor met and fell in love with a kindred spirit Clyde Ensor III, who works for his family’s automotive company Hesco Parts. He is also, however, co-owner of Feather Your Nest.

“The joke is that Clyde is the brains and I’m the beauty,” Ensor said. “He does things like the contracts, and I get to do the designing. Even though it started as my business we are totally in it together. You might say that I’m the face of it, and he’s the motor that’s driving it”

Creative control: With the founding of Feather Your Nest, Ensor realized that she liked having only one or two clients a year instead of the steady stream she had assisted at Bittners. She and Clyde assembled a team of high-quality professionals. Including cousin Brown Carpenter and architect Tim Winters, on whom they could rely for the various aspects of planning and building about two homes each year.

Their finished ‘spec houses in Forest School Estates have a slicker price beginning at $1 million. Two homes have been finished and sold, a third house is nearing completion, and a fourth has begun.

In that development Ensor has architectural control over even the lots she and her husband don’t actually own. She must approve all of the designs, right down to making sure that houses that are side by side use different roofing materials.

“I want Forest School Estates to be diverse and interesting so that when it’s completed, people will drive by and wonder when the houses were built,” Ensor said. “They will remind people of that 1920s Louisville architecture found in interestingly quirky neighborhoods like Normandy Village, but they are absolutely made for today’s living.”

Style and grace: Feather Your Nests motto is ‘treating homes with the style and grace of yesteryear,’ but those are not merely words. An Ensor-built house features solid-wood doors, uncommon flooring materials (such as wide-plank pine with rough-cut nails), and exterior walls built with two-by-six (a few words missing) two-by-fours - a feature that allows additional insulation among other bonuses.

“The difference isn’t always something that you see, it’s more that you can feel it,” Ensor said. “The house is sturdier and more substantial feeling. We’re trying to explore different options of building, looking to the past and not doing cookie-cutter styles.”

The Voice-Tribune, Wednesday, January 13, 2005:

Structures with substance—Julie Ensor’s Feather Your Nest designs and build unique home meant to last for generations. Voice-Tribune Profile, by Mary Alan Woodward.

Her love of architecture from back east and from England is evident in details such as front-facing chimneys, topped with chimney pots; steep roofs, often (several words missing) Ensor has on the market now has a covered loggia with brick arches and an outdoor fireplace.

“Basically what I do is come up with the floor plan and how the house should work, from the woman and mothers point of view,” she said. “There’s nothing wrong with male builders, but I don’t think that they quite understand the inner workings of a home as well as a woman does.”

Strategic living: The Ensors’ own house, in Anchorage, is a good example of that sensibility. A butler’s pantry situated between the garage and the kitchen serves as a well-organized catch-all for the flotsam of daily living.

“I hate when you go into a kitchen and everybody puts there junk in there,” she said. “It’s better to have drop-off spaces before you get there. Our butler’s pantry has a drawer for keys, another for the children’s hairbows, and so on; plus what I call a lipstick station, so I can do a swipe in front of a mirror before I walk out the door.”

However, Ensor is mindful of the features that the man of the house wants, too. She typically specifies three-to four-car garages, along with a substantial study, in the houses she designs.

“One thing I always do is incorporate an antique some-where inside,” she added. “In the most recent house we did, we found some wonderful pine columns for the step-down into the living room. Antique mantle-pieces and old windows can give a new house instant character. As I see it, I’m not really selling houses, I’m selling homes — places that have a sense of the past.”

A new era?: Like many people. Ensor estimates that Louisville is habitually 10 years behind other cities when it comes to keeping up with home design and decorating. However, she catches glimpses of a new era on the horizon.

“I hope I’m ahead of the curve, and I hope my work will inspire other builders to step up to the plate and bring better architecture to this area, she said. “If I do nothing else in Forest School Estates than make other people open their eyes a bit more, I’ll have succeeded.”

Her dream is for her buildings to have so much substance, her descendants will live in them some day.

“I want them to be able to tell their friends that their great-great-grandmother built their house,” she said. I want these to be everlasting homes, not houses that somebody will tear down in a few years to build something better.”

Role model: For now, however. Ensor is watching the next generation grow up in her own household. Like her parents, she and her husband have four daughters: Annabelle, Sarabeth and twins Katie and Molly, all under the age of 7.

“I do a lot of my designing after the girls have gone to bed,” Ensor said. but they’re used to being around house construction. They even help me pick out colors. Molly wants the next house to be purple, but I don’t think I’ll go along with that.”

And will any of the girls follow in their ancestors’ footsteps?

“It’s possible,” she said, “They keep their little work boots in the back of my car so they can visit construction sites with me, and whenever one of them is playing with blocks at home. I think, See, you can be a builder —just like Mommy.”

Landsdowne—This is my house in Glenview where the occult movie, Asylum of Satan, was shot. Dr. Charles Pearce financed much of the movie, his office was on Hubbards Lane.

FROM—<http://www.williamgirdler.com/> Bill Girdler hailed from a rather prominent Louisville family and his passion for cinema was cultivated at an early age. After serving in the Air Force, he formed "Studio One" with best friend and brother-in-law J. Patrick Kelly, who remained Bill's business partner throughout his career. The company initially focused on TV commercials, but it soon shifted its attention to cinematic pursuits via Asylum of Satan. The company later changed its name to "Mid-America Pictures" when Girdler's films began to reap impressive box-office receipts.

Friends and colleagues agree that Girdler's love affair with filmmaking reached obsessive proportions. Although he fostered no illusions in respect to the quality of his own films, he thrilled at seeing his efforts hit the big screen. Bill put everything he had into his movies, even when times were bleak and trying.

His body of work embraces a wide variety of genre themes, including blaxploitation, slasher, political suspense, and supernatural horror. While all of Girdler's movies are memorable, they range in quality from hypnotically mediocre to fabulously ham-handed on an Edward D. Wood scale. His films always feature a brand-name star, with a list of leading players that includes Pam Grier, Leslie Nielsen, William Marshall, and Christopher George.

Girdler's plots were simple and gimmicky, similar to Twilight Zone episodes only stretched out to feature lengths. To his credit, Girdler often based his own stories on a scrap of odd trivia or some eccentric news tidbit. When all else failed, he'd just take a huge horror hit of the time and mold it into his own unique vision of entertainment; a vision that was a bit dated even by seventies' standards. No matter what the subject or genre, Girdler's distinct approach to filmmaking is recognizable throughout all of his movies. Some insist this approach is just plain bad. Others say his approach is charming, as it is fueled by a heartfelt passion for classic filmmaking.

Friends allege that his "make 'em fast and cheap" directorial style stemmed from Girdler's premonition that he'd die by the age of 30. The morbid claim is validated by statements Girdler gave to local newspapers. Associates say Bill's preoccupation with his own death was so acute, he often made comments indicating he was in a race against time to build his film repertoire.

Girdler shot five of his nine movies on-location in his hometown of Louisville, KY, which was no small feat considering the Hollywood-centric nature of his chosen profession. Even when he was granted the opportunity to film his efforts elsewhere, he always brought his Kentucky comrades with him. It is frequently said that Girdler never forgot a friend or a favor.

Following his death, the J.B. Speed Art Museum in Louisville dedicated a film collection in honor of William Girdler. The collection that bears his name features cinematic luminaries such as Lillian Gish and D.W. Griffith. None of Girdler's own movies are included in the collection.

New SJA is ready for business

The new staff judge advocate, Lt. Col. Gordon B. Finley Jr., is here and ready for business. Although Colonel Finley has no immediate plans for changes at this time, he feels that he owes it to his clients, present and future, to get familiar with the present system before making any changes.

"I do plan to make sure commanders know all of the legal options available to them and recommend which ones we think are best depending on the circumstances," said Colonel Finley.

Prior to coming to Upper Heyford Colonel Finley was stationed at the Air Force Central Labor Law Office at Randolph AFB, Texas. Some of his assignments have been in Washington, D.C.; Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio; Travis AFB, Calif.; Vietnam; Norton AFB, Calif.; and others.

"I'm most impressed with the discipline and morale of the people at Upper Heyford. I'm also impressed with the diversity and the extent of the workload that brings us in contact with the British civil law enforcement and Ministry of Defense legal personnel," he said.

Colonel Finley, who is a member of the Anglo-American Committee, enjoys meeting people, seeing the country, reading and all sports.

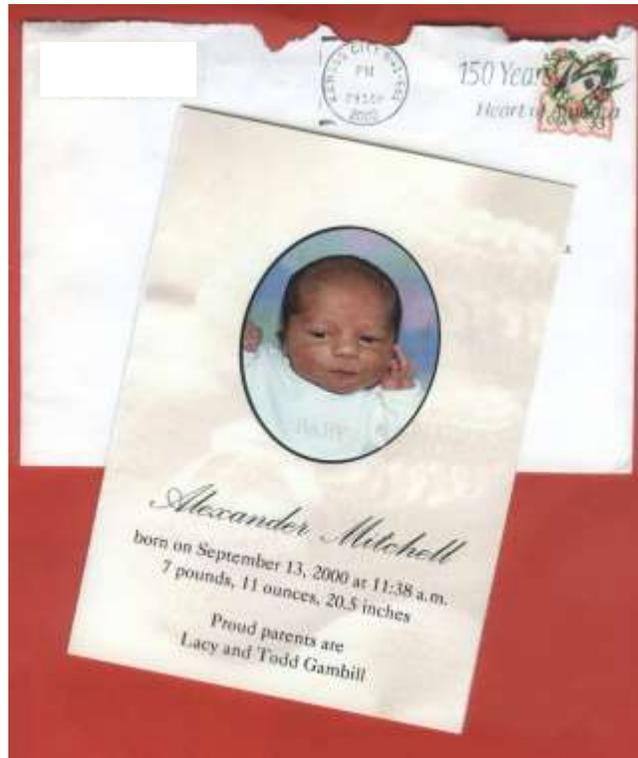

His wife Kay, is still in Texas and will be joining him in September.

HISTORY

Hussung Mechanical Contractors, Inc. was founded in 1966 by brothers, George and Henry Hussung. A recent graduate engineer, George's son, David, joined the company in 1967 and assumed estimating and project management responsibilities. In the early years, HMC was successfully executing projects such as the Elizabethtown High School and the Oxmoor and Bashford Manor Malls. These early projects ranged anywhere from $5,000 to well over $1,000,000.

In 1966, HMC officially initiated the service side of the business, HMC Service Company, focusing on preventive maintenance and ongoing customer support. "We felt it was important to be able to service our customer's building once a project was complete. We wanted to continue our partnerships with our customers based on the trust we earned during the construction process," states David L. Hussung.

Over the past forty years, HMC has experienced tremendous growth and now employs well over 340 individuals, including David's son, David Clark Hussung. HMC's growth has allowed them to undertake projects exceeding $30,000,000, including the recent Churchill Downs additions and renovation, Jewish Hospital's Rudd Heart and Lung Center, and the Papa John's Headquarters Building.

Waggener High Scrapbook:

Frank Leon Lovell (61)

Frank Lovell today—2008

FROM: The Voice Of St. Matthews, September 14, 1961:

Two students off to college with Yellowstone memories

Two St. Matthews area boys have gone off to college with memories of an eventful summer at Yellowstone National Park. The two, Doug French and Jim May, returned home last Thursday after working all summer at Old Faithful Inn.

Jim brought home mountain trout to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jim May of 3908 Elfin Road, as evidence of his skill as a fisherman in Yellowstone, and Doug brought his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Millard French, 3936 Nanz, a pair of seven-point matched antlers from an Elk, which he found while on a camping trip.

The fish and antlers caused somewhat of a problem for the boys en route home, since they had three friends as passengers as far as Mexico, Mo., in addition to all of their luggage.

Now Doug's parents felt obligated to find a place to display the antlers since there was an ordeal in bringing them from Wyoming. But Mrs. French says the antlers present a problem as they are huge.

The Mays were too busy, following Jim's arrival, getting him ready for college to have a fish fry, so the fish went into the Mays' deep freeze.

Both boys have enrolled at the University of Kentucky. They had only two days at home in which to regale their friends with tales of life in Yellowstone. One of the points of interest they tell about is that August 25 is celebrated as Christmas in the Park.

Their enthusiasm for Yellowstone has been contagious and several of their friends are applying for jobs there next summer.

Mr. and Mrs. French and Mr. and Mrs. May were among parents of freshman who were entertained with a special convocation and tea at the University last Sunday. The students attended Waggener last year.

FROM: The Voice, July 25, 1974, 25th Anniversary Issue:

Jimmy had first published The Voice on July 14, 1949. It was tabloid size, eight pages, and was called "St. Matthews, Your Community Newspaper", and, was circulated free to 6,500 homes. A born promoter, Jimmy staged a contest to name the paper, with $100 as the prize.

Mrs. James W. May, of 3908 Elfin, immediately mailed in four entries, one for each member of her family. The winning entry, "The Voice of St. Matthews," was in the name of her four-year-old daughter, Cissy, who got the $100.

"Voice of St. Matthews" Wins One Hundred Dollars for Lucky Girl

All smiles as they receive a check from Mrs. J. K. Van Arsdale, Contest Manager,

This is a Voice article on Jim's sister Martha May, Waggener (63)

Martha May, who named Voice, is statuesque beauty of 19

Fifteen years ago a little four-year old girl wasn't particularly concerned about newspapers, and probably was doing what most little girls do at that age.

But in her own deft way she chose a card that had the name "The Voice of St. Matthews" listed on it, and for the following 15 years this newspaper has carried that name.

The little girl then was known as "Cissy" May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James W. May, 3908 Elfin. But during the years "Cissy" grew, and somewhere along the way the name "Cissy" was dropped and she has become known by her right name, Martha.

How Martha (or Cissy) gained the honor of having named this newspaper briefly is this:

The May family decided to enter the contest being held by the newspaper, which at the time was a beginning shoppers circular, to name the fledgling weekly.

The family settled on four names: The Herald, The Messenger, The Bugle, and The Voice. Each name was written on separate cards and each member selected a card. Martha's entry won.

Another St. Matthews resident had suggested the same name but Martha's entry arrived first, so she received the $100 prize being offered.

Though Martha might have had a little bit of luck in selecting the right card, she isn't giving up any of the honor to either of the three other members of the family, especially to her brother Jimmy, two years her senior. Reminded by her mother that Jimmy could just as easily have selected the winning card, Martha quickly replies that her card was chosen.

Martha, now 19 and a tall, beautiful girl, is no stranger in the general St. Matthews area, having gone through Waggener High School with honors and been active in numerous activities there.

She was a member of the National Honor Society, a cheerleader, named Waggener's Personality Girl one year, belonged to the Beta Club, Quill & Scroll--a literary group, and Youth Speaks,

Martha sews on a dress project--her own creation. Waggener, class of 1963

Her grades were exceptionally good--a fact Martha tries to hide, but with help of her admiring mother it was learned that Martha is continuing with a good scholastic record at the University of Kentucky, where she will re-enter this fall for her second year. Last year she made a four-point average there.

She is doing very well, too, in other activities at U. of K. She was selected for Alpha Lambda Delta, an honorary freshman sorority and received a certificate for academic excellence from the College of Education, and duly recognized on Honors Day.

If Martha has any regrets attending U. of K. (her whole family are avid U. of K. fans; her father is a former proests--among several other activities.

Lance Corporal Patrick McNally home after 2 years of active duty

Lance Cpl. Patrick McNally, 27, has rejoined his wife and parents at 3831 Elmwood Rd. after two years of active service in the Marine Corps. He was in Vietnam more than half of the time. McNally was released from active duty Aug. 14, but will be a member of the Marine Reserves four more years. His wife, Peggy Darlene, and his mother, Mrs. Nell D. McNally, live at the Elmwood Avenue address.

During his tour of duty in Vietnam, McNally received the Navy Commendation Medal for meritorious service with Service Company, Ninth Engineer Battalion, First Marine Division, from April 4, 1968, to April 22, 1969.

According to the citation, McNally displayed "an exceptional technical ability" by making an essential mechanical part of a "highly sophisticated" road grader entirely by hand when available equipment was not capable of producing the part.

After his reassignment Feb. 20, 1969, as a motor vehicle operator, McNally "maintained his vehicle in a consistently high state of operational readiness and, driving on more than 5,000 miles of potentially dangerous roads, repeatedly exposed himself to the possibility of enemy mines and snipers while fulfilling his unit's mission," the citation said. "As a result of his diligent and resourceful efforts, the operational effectiveness of his unit was greatly enhanced."

Tom F. Ogle, of St. Matthews, came in fifth in the 230 mile International Canoe Derby recently held between the United States and Canadian borders.

Eleven canoe teams started but only five finished the grueling 230 mile race, Dave Wolf of Volga, South Dakota, was Tom's canoe partner.

Tom is assistant guide chief this summer at the Region Ten Scout Base near Ely, Minn. Last summer Tom, along with Tom Grunwald, also of St. Matthews, were the first known Americans to make the 1500 mile, 55 day, wilderness trip from Ely to Churchill, Manitoba Hudson Bay by canoe.

Tom, 21, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Ogle, 409 Sherrin Ave., in Norbourne Estates. He is a graduate of Waggener High School and is a senior, majoring in Ecology at Purdue University. Tom was active in Little League Baseball in St. Matthews and is a

Ogle twins to make 2,000 mile canoe trip

Terry and Ted Ogle, 20-year-old twin sons of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ogle, 409 Sherrin Ave., are making plans for a 2,000 mile canoe trip this summer to Great Slave Lake in the North West Territory.

The boys, both juniors at the University of Kentucky, will leave here June 7 for Sommers Canoe Base in Ely Minnesota, where they will get their instructions and supplies. From there they will go to Winnipeg, Canada to begin the canoe trip. They will return in August.

The boys both worked as guides at the Canoe Base in Ely the last four years. Their older brother, Tom, 22 a senior at Purdue University, will spend the summer at Island Royale, a Government Wildlife Reserve, at Duluth, Minn.

Tucker House is set on five acres of striking beauty -- with woods, gardens and a spring-fed lake. You may take in the beautiful landscape from the comfort of the decks or brick patio, or you might choose to explore the area more completely by putting on hiking boots and old clothes and roaming the woods around the lake. Your sights will include the original stone spring house, a dry-laid masonry wall and the quarry that supplied the stone for the foundation of Tucker House and its outbuildings over 162 years ago. Nature, history and tranquility seem to co-exist in this place. This is a perfect setting for a bed and breakfast inn.

As you follow the winding cherry banister to the second floor, the four guest chambers await, each with its own private bath. While each room has been meticulously appointed with antiques of the era, three have been furnished with reproduction queen-sized beds for your sleeping comfort. The fourth bedroom has an authentic 1820's rope bed with full-sized bedding.

The second floor also includes a common room where you may sample refreshments from the refrigerator at any time during your stay. In the morning, you'll awaken to the aroma of freshly brewed coffee served there. Step through the French doors of the common room onto the second floor deck that overlooks the wooded grounds for quiet mornings and pleasant evenings. During warm months, a large heated in-ground pool is available for your "cooling off" pleasure.

A fitness room with a treadmill, recumbent bicycle and a full weight machine is available for our guests twenty-four hours a day.

Dining Room

Your full "country-gourmet" breakfast may be served in the lovely formal dining room, set with antique china. Or you may dine on Kentucky Bybee pottery in the sunlit gathering room or on the adjoining deck, both of which overlook the gardens and woods. The menu may include such items as Kentucky country ham, peppered bacon, stuffed French toast, waffles, cheese grits, fresh fruit, homemade breads and biscuits, omelets, frittatas, stratas or Tucker House eggs.

Each chamber has a private bath with shower and tub, thick terry cloth robes, thirsty oversized towels, hair dryers and lighted make-up mirrors. If you forget any "necessities," or if you need anything that you don't see, just ask. We'll see to it that it's made available to you.

Ring brothers share look back at grandparents' days gone by in old Oro Blanco mining district

By Jim Lamb
Green Valley News

ARIVACA JUNCTION—it's possible that gold mine speculators made more by buying and selling claims and mines in Southern Arizona's Oro Blanco district than they ever did from selling the gold, said a pair of historians last Thursday.

Brothers Al Ring and Bob Ring told the Tubac Historical Society at a Cow Palace breakfast about life in the Oro Blanco district at the end of the 19th and start of the 20th century.

The Rings had a special window into the area's history.

Their grandparents Ambrose and Grace Ring lived at Old Glory mining camp as 22-year-old newlyweds from December 1905 to March 1906.

And what caused the Rings to pull up stakes after that short stay remains somewhat a mystery, said the historians.

Ambrose Ring's personal journal says only that they "stay'd until conditions became intolerable personally."

Ambrose and Grace Ring eventually traveled much of the world as he pursued a mining career in out-of-the-way places. So Al

Ring said it may not have been the primitive conditions that caused them to move on.

The Oro Blanco district consisted of about 100 square miles between the now-ghost town of Ruby and the Mexican border northwest of Nogales.

The historians' pictures show it was a primitive and remote area, and, in fact, there were some fatal robberies at mine-owned mercantiles.

Al Ring said there were as many as 1,000 mines in the Oro Blanco district.

Area miners originally toiled for silver, then gold and eventually copper, lead and zinc.

No glut of gold

"Probably less than 1 percent of all the gold ever found in Arizona came from the Oro Blanco district," he said.

But that didn't keep speculators and miners from coming to try their hand.

Al and Bob Ring illustrated the talk with pictures taken by Ambrose Ring and other persons and from the Arizona Historical Society.

In many cases they have returned to the area and by studying the landscape, including mountain tops, found many of the locations where the original pictures were taken.

All that's left of the Old Glory Mine is some level places on a hill side and parts of some walls.

Earlier pictures show an elaborate tramway leading from a mountain-top mine to a mill.

There were turn-of-the-century photos of a dam that held 12 million gallons of water.

"One good summer rain could fill it," said Al Ring.

Miners used water to process the ore.

The Old Glory consisted of 500 feet of underground shafts and tunnels. The ore carts brought out as much as 35 to 40 tons a day of ore.

Miners were paid about $1.50 to $2.50 a day. Foremen and supervisors earned $3.50.

Often they were paid in script or tokens that could be redeemed only at the company store, such as the Franco American store at Warsaw, a mining settlement.

New York City origins

Ambrose and Grace Ring were products of New York City.

Ambrose had been in Arizona briefly before returning to New York to wed Grace in late 1905.

They traveled by train to Tuc-son and took a stage to Arivaca to get to the Old Glory.

It was a 10 1/2 hour stage ride and required a change of horses or mules seven times.

Ambrose and Grace Ring took many pictures.

One shows her in long skirt holding on to her straw hat while standing on a promontory. The caption says "Grace Ring Looking into Mexico 1906."

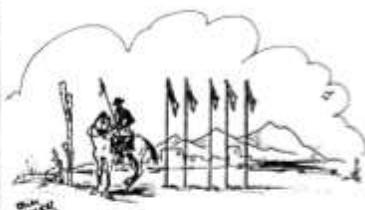

Another shows a young Ambrose Ring sitting on a rock, holding a short barreled rifle. It's titled "Ambrose Ring in Reflective Moment 1906."

There are pictures of miners lined up in front of a company store, of persons riding horses and mules and a picture of the stage that took the Rings to Arivaca.

Al and Bob Ring have compiled 25 large note books of materials about the Oro Blanco district.

They said they plan to continue to study the area and they hope some day solve the mystery of the intolerable personal conditions that drove their grandparents to move on.

Anyone with information about the Oro Blanco Mining District should contact them at 529-8328 or 529-0910.

"Life in the Oro Blanco Mining Camps in 1900" With Al & Bob Ring, Thursday, November 16, 2000

by Mary Bouham
Don't you just love it when you meet someone who gets truly excited about history?

Well that happened a few months ago at the Arizona Historical Society library when I heard a whoop from across the room and just had to go find out what it was all about.

Old Glory Mine

Al Ring, researching the Old Glory Mine, had just made a wonderful find. The reason it was so important was that for a number of years, Old Glory was the home of his parents Ambrose and Grace Ring!

After talking to Al for a few minutes, I invited him down to the Tubac Historical Society research library. Turns out we had some excellent information to add to his collection which has now grown to include the entire Oro Blanco Mining District and surrounding area including notable people, ranches, towns and businesses.

Ruby Mine (formerly Montana)

Many of you joined us last March for the THIS field trip to Ruby. If you enjoyed that trip, you will be sure to enjoy hearing Al, and brother Bob. They will be telling the story of their parents and the places and events that surrounded them in the wild and woolly mining area that included the Austerlitz, Montana (later named Ruby), Old Glory, Yellow Jacket, Warsaw and Oro Blanco mines.

Al and Bob first presented their program to the Forty-first Annual Arizona Historical Convention in April of this year and the Tucson Corral of Westerners a few months later. Their firsthand knowledge and wonderful family pictures should make for a very memorable program.

Cow Palace

The Cow Palace in Amado (I-19 & exit 48) will be the location for our breakfast buffet meeting on Thursday, November 16. Breakfast will be served at 9:00 a.m., followed by a few announcements and the Ring brother's program at approximately 9:45 a.m.

A reservation flyer is located inside. Please return it along with payment no later than Saturday, November 11. Cost per person will be $8.50 including tax and gratuity.

Contact for the event will be Irene Deaton 398-2657. ♦

Road to Ruby—filled with history and mystery, by Jim Lamb:

RUBY—Twice in the 1920s bandits from south of the border robbed the general store in the Arizona town of Ruby.

Both times they killed the proprietors--four murders in all.

Some of the walls of the Ruby Mercantile still stand and before it closed, it "served the best root beer floats in the world," recalled Tallia Pfrimmer Cahoon, who lived there in the 1930s.

Cahoon has joined Al Ring and Bob Ring of Tucson to research the history of the Oro Blanco Mining District, the town of Ruby and other settlements and mines nearby.

Ruby is about 12 miles southeast of Arivaca, a sparsely settled area.

Roads are gravel for much of the way. Montana Peak looms just south of the town.

Hills are still showing the greens coaxed to life by summer rains.

Rivulets flow across the road, attracting yellow-winged butterflies. They light on the mud and flutter away as vehicles approach.

Al and Bob Ring and Cahoon will soon share some of their discoveries in a new column, "The Road to Ruby," in the Green Valley News and Sun.

Mysteries to remember: Besides the discoveries they'll also share some mysteries of the old mining community that numbered 1,200 persons at one time.

One mystery is why mining engineer Ambrose Ring, their grandfather, fresh out of Columbia University, and his bride Grace stayed for only a few months in 1905 and 1906.

It was his first professional job and in his diary he wrote they left, "when conditions became intolerable (personal.)"

In a family album there are 33 photos they took when they lived there. It apparently wasn't the work that caused the sudden departure.

He pursued a career in the mining business before retiring to Tucson after working for Asarco for many years and in many places.

Family members don't recall him ever mentioning that job long ago in the Ruby area, "and as far as we can tell he never visited the area" during the years he and Grace lived in Tucson, said Al Ring.

The Rings haven't solved what the intolerable personal situations that sent their grandparents elsewhere.

Recent visitors arrived at the locked gate. The key they had wasn't the right one. Cahoon hopped for the fence and said, "Let's go."

Two of the co-owners, Pat and Howard Frederick of Tucson, arrived a few minutes later with the key, but by then the tour was already under way.

School in a tent: Cahoon pointed out the old school. "My third-grade class was in a tent," she said.

One of her ancestors was a mining engineer who supervised the installation of a water line from the Santa Cruz River near Tumacacori, 17 miles over the mountains to Ruby.

That line, built from 1928 to 1930, cost $100,000. It was a 4-inch pipe that filled up a water tank. Lines led to homes and campsites.

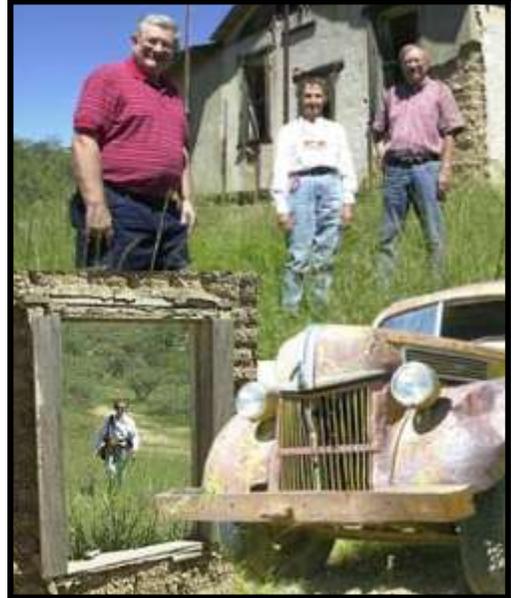

The pump site is gone now, but recently Cahoon and another area historian, Philip Halpenny, went looking in the areas west of Tumacacori. In the desert they found a 20-foot section of the old water line.

Cahoon spent a few minutes looking at the walls of her old home. "We don't have time to paper the walls today," Al Ring called in jest.

Cahoon lived in an area known as Hollywood. The mine managers lived on a hill across the road in what the locals dubbed "Snob Hill."

Visitors tramp through knee-high Side Oats Grama Grass beneath native mesquites and Arizona oaks. A small pond is east of the town and fishermen can try their luck for $17.50 a day. Admission to the town is $12.

Al Ring has spent several years looking at the history of the area, and hopes to find more early records and former residents.

Road to Ruby—filled with history and mystery, by Jim Lamb:

The three are writing the column partly to set straight myths and legends that don't quite hew to historical reality.

The area was originally mined for gold and silver but at the big operations at Ruby miners went 700 to 800 feet down to search for lead and zinc.

Part of the old mine structure and smelting plant are still there. The mine closed in 1941 and residents started moving out.

Al Ring has compiled more than 80 ring binders 2-inches thick with his research.

And part of that tells about other money-making and money-losing endeavors--selling gold mining shares to unsuspecting buyers often from back East.

The writers will talk about mining for gold in the Montana Mine, the two double murders, what Ruby was like in the 1930s, and "How Ruby Became a Ghost Town."

Read 'em all here. Cahoon conducts tours with Pima Community College. For information call non-credit classes, 206-6579, and ask for Ann Warner.

OUR FIRST COLUMN

ALONG THE RUBY ROAD—What We're Up To—Bob Ring, Al Ring, Tallia Pfrimmer Cahoon

Sure, you've heard of Ruby, the mining ghost town. You might even have visited the old place. It's about 45 miles southwest of Green Valley, only five miles north of the international border with Mexico. You get there from Green Valley by going south on Interstate 19, getting off at Exit 42, heading west to Arivaca, and then south from Arivaca on the Ruby Road through the old Oro Blanco Mining District (OBMD). The ghost town is settled at 4,200 feet altitude amongst beautiful rolling hills and rugged canyons, west of the Atascosa Mountains.

But did you know that Ruby was the mining camp that served the Montana mine, the largest producer of lead and zinc in Arizona in the 1930's? And did you know that during that period, the population of Ruby was around 1,200 people? Did you know that twice, in the early 1920's, Mexican bandits robbed the Ruby general store and killed the proprietors? Eight decades later, parts of that general store still stand, in one of the best-preserved ghost towns in Arizona.

We'll bet you didn't know that Ruby has only been named Ruby since 1912, when Arizona became a state, and the camp was renamed after the storekeeper's wife. Prior to 1912, the tiny settlement of fewer than 50 people was called Montana Camp, and the Montana mine produced gold and silver, rather than lead and zinc.

Did you know that Americans first located (mineral rights claimed) the Montana mining claim in 1877? Did you know that in 1886, Geronimo made his last raids in Arizona, at ranches within five miles of Montana Camp? And did you know that well-known Territorial period Tucson merchandiser, Louis Zeckendorf, owned the Montana mine for four decades?

In this column, we plan to tell you about these events, and others, that paint the colorful history of Montana Camp, Ruby, and the OBMD. In fact, we'll open things up to include stories that occurred anywhere "along the Ruby road," from Arivaca to Nogales.

"We" are brothers Bob and Al Ring, whose paternal grandfather started his mining career in the OBMD in 1906, and Tallia Pfrimmer Cahoon, who grew up in Ruby during the 1930's, and who returned 55 years later to begin hosting Pima Community College's public tours of Ruby.

The three of us have been researching the subject of Ruby and mining in the OBMD for years. In fact, we're right in the middle of preparing a book that will include all the details.

As we move along on the book, we'd like to share with you some of the highlights. This will include the mining story, with emphasis on the Montana mine, by far the most successful of over 4,500 mining claims located in the tiny 100-square mile OBMD. We'll tell you about life in the old mining camps, including the personal experiences of our relatives, complete with old family photos. We'll include anecdotes about colorful characters important to the story and share personal recollections of former residents of Ruby.

What we hope to get from you is more information. Do you have any documents, photos, or personal histories that will expand our knowledge and perhaps contribute to our book?

We hope you enjoy our stories. Let us know what questions you have on what we write, or something brand new. And please contact us if you think you have helpful information.

St. Matthews Firefighters

84 Years of Firefighting in St. Matthews, Kentucky

Al Ring

This book is a reference piece and the first illustrated and documented story of the St. Matthews Fire Department from its beginning in 1919 through 2003. There are 84 years of documents, letters, interviews, newspaper articles, pictures and more that vividly tell the story of the fire service and firefighters. Historical data from this book and the documentation of the events from these 84 years will be of significant interest to fire and local history buffs, researchers, and former department members. This true story is about the strengths of over 650 people who were involved with the department over the past 84 years. Men and women from all walks of life, educational levels, etc. came together to create a very unique and compelling story. They set and maintained the bar for all levels of the firefighting service. They wore, and continue to be, a much respected fire department in the firefighting industry. The citizens of the St. Matthews Fire Protection District and citizens of Kentucky have every right to be very proud of these fine dedicated professionals.

A small group of dedicated former members of the St. Matthews Fire Department joined together with a common goal, to bring together fellow members of the department, organize reunions, and highlight the department, its members and other important projects such as this book. This unique camaraderie is the catalyst that makes this fire department great! Other important projects for the association are to preserve the history of the department by maintaining records, articles, photographs, and compiling this historical account of the department.

St. Matthews fire history chronicled by ex-firefighter

Book published ahead of alumni group's reunion

By MARTHA ELSON
melson@courier-journal.com
The Courier-Journal

At $2.5 million, the St. Matthews Fire Protection District's budget is now one of the largest of the 19 suburban departments in Jefferson County.

But in 1932, during the Great Depression, the St. Matthews fire service had only $150 in the treasury and was struggling to pay a balance of about $4,650 on a new $6,500 pumper truck named Betsy.

A fund-raising dance that year at the Zachary Taylor American Legion Post brought in only about $10, and in 1933 the company that had sold the pumper to the department began the process of repossessing it. The St. Matthews Voluntary Fire Association had been formed in 1919, and contributions from residents and others to pay for fire equipment were voluntary, too.

It wasn't until 1938 that the debt was paid off, after the truck pumped out many basements during the 1937 flood, former St. Matthews firefighter Al Ring of Tucson, Ariz., writes in "St. Matthews Firefighters: 84 Years of Firefighting in St. Matthews, Kentucky," published by Butler Books of Louisville.

The new fire engine-red hardback book, with flames and a photo of the restored Betsy on the cover, is due out in time for a second reunion planned for July 31 by the St. Matthews Fire Department Alumni Association. The first reunion was in 2001. The names of about 650 men and women who have been associated with the fire service are listed in the back of the book.

Ring's work life after he graduated from Waggener High School included running service stations in St. Matthews, selling real estate and building houses. He moved to Tucson in 1998 after retiring.

The association formed an eight-person book committee. Besides Ring, its members are Rick H. Albers, A.E. "Bill" Andriot III, E. Gar Davis, Clarke Fenimore, John M. "Jack" Monohan III, Mike Noon and Russell Rakestraw.

Six members put up $1,000 each to get the printing of the 208-page book started, and 1,050 copies have been printed.

Firefighting is "in our blood," Andriot said. "It's just a part of our lives."

Ring and Monohan, who retired as assistant chief in 1993, decided about 1974 to compile a history of the department, and they researched hundreds of letters, documents, pictures, records and newspaper articles.

Ring said that he's a pack rat by nature and that his mother had made a scrapbook of his years with the fire service. He went through files in the basement of the fire station on Sears Avenue and also scoured microfilm at the Louisville Free Public Library. He and Monohan weren't able to finish the project in the 1970s because of other responsibilities, and the idea was not revived until about six months before the 2001 reunion.

The book details the major fires in the area, including one in 1921 in Jeffersontown that "burned almost half the town due to all wood frame buildings," according to the book. St. Matthews sent men to help.

It also discusses other notable fires: One in 1937 that caused about $130,000 in damage at Holy Trinity Catholic Church and School; one in 1941 that destroyed about 150 tons of hay, milking machinery and other equipment at the old Plainview Dairy on Hurstbourne Lane near Shelbyville Road, after about 425 cows were herded to safety; one in 1962 that destroyed the A&P supermarket at 3726 Lexington Road; and one in 1971 at Greathouse Elementary School on Grandview Avenue, now St. Matthews City Hall.

Davis writes in the book's foreword about firefighting "heroes." He also talks about advances since the Betsy days, including new safety gear, enclosed cabs, air conditioning and seat belts. "One of the biggest changes is that they do not let the firefighters ride on the tailboard!" he wrote.

The fire service started off in the Frankfort Avenue garage of one of the association's incorporators, A.J. Eline. Today, it has two stations, both staffed around the clock, on Sears Avenue and at Brownsboro Road and Hubbards Lane.

Despite the early lean years, Ring writes that Monohan's late father, who was chief from 1941 to 1977, told him that "the downfall of volunteer fire departments may well be too much money."

Some suburban departments have merged, and the St. Matthews department is discussing consolidation with others. Ring said he thinks more mergers are inevitable because of the need to cut costs.

"The present (tax) code was set up when it (the fire service) was 90percent volunteer," he said. "Now it's almost just the opposite. It's a whole different world and much more expensive."

New book tells history of St. Matthews fire department

By ASHLEY O. ROSEN
Staff Writer

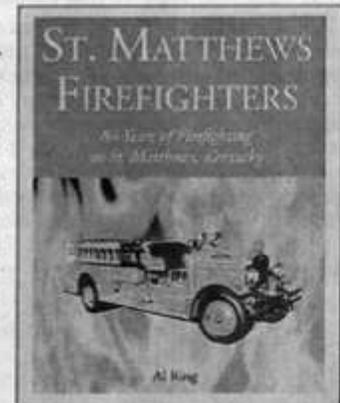

The St. Matthews Fire Protection District, among the largest of the 19 suburban departments in Jefferson County, has two fire stations that are staffed 24 hours a day. The facilities, one on Sears Avenue and one at the intersection of Brownsboro Road and Hubbards Lane, house three pumper trucks, a ladder truck and a quint, a state-of-the-art fire truck.

Things weren't always so sophisticated for the men and women who serve the St. Matthews area.

The budget, now $2.5 million a year, was once dependent totally upon donations by residents and others.

In fact, in the early 1930s, the company's one truck, a pumper named "Betsy," was in danger of being repossessed. The truck's work in pumping out homes after the devastating flood of '37, a deed often rewarded by donations, was what finally allowed the department to pay off the debt on the truck.

In a new book, retired St. Matthews firefighter Al Ring, now a Tucson, Ariz., resident, recounts the history and highlights of the department.

Al Ring will sign copies of "St. Matthews Firefighters" on July 30 at A Reader's Corner and on July 31 at Borders Books & Music.

"St. Matthews Firefighters: 84 Years of Firefighting in St. Matthews, Kentucky," published by Butler Books of Louisville, was completed by Ring and others in time for a reunion of the St. Matthews Fire Department Alumni Association that will be held on Saturday, July 31, at the St. Matthews Community Center on Ten Pin Lane.

This is the second such reunion the group has held - a 2001 gathering drew about 200 former firefighters and others associated with the department.

The book is appealing to a wider public than merely those at the station houses, said the district's bookkeeper, Tina Freibert.

"I've had a lot of people, St. Matthews residents, call and say they are interested in reading the book," she said. "They want to get some insight into what's in it."

The book project began in 1974 when Ring and former assistant chief John M. "Jack" Monohan III decided to research and put together a historical perspective on the department. After intensive research, the project was sidelined for other responsibilities; it was not resurrected until just before the 2001 reunion.

Ring and Monohan had the assistance of six other men - Rick H. Albers, A.E. "Bill" Andriot III, E. Gar Davis, Clarke Fenimore, Mike Noon and Russell Rakestraw - compiling photos and text about major fires in the area and advances in equipment and safety gear.

Major fires mentioned in the book include one in 1937 at Holy Trinity Catholic Church and school; one in 1941 at the old Plainview Dairy; one at the old A&P supermarket on Lexington Road in 1962; and a 1971 one at Greathouse Elementary School at what is now the site of St. Matthews City Hall on Grandview Avenue.

Ring said the area's rich history shines through in the book.

"There are 650 plus men and women who have made that organization since 1919," he said. "Starting out at the very earliest they had the Ellines and the Rodys, heads of the community, acting as firefighters and board members."

"It's about fires, of course, but it's a story about people. That tells the history of the community ... the people of St. Matthews should be proud of that fact that their department was a leader and set the trends in volunteer firefighting. And they continue to lead. They realize that they have to prepare for the future."

More than technology has changed for the department. What began in 1919 as the all-volunteer St. Matthews Voluntary Fire Association, the department now consists of 30 paid and 20 volunteer firefighters.

The department is discussing the possibility of consolidation with some of the nearby districts, as some other suburban departments have done.

About 1,000 copies of the 280-page, bright red, hardcover books have been printed.

Ring will sign copies of the book, which sells for $34.95, on Friday, July 30, from 6 to 8 p.m. at A Reader's Corner, at 138 Breckenridge Lane, and on Saturday, July 31, from 2 to 4 p.m. at Borders Books & Music in Shelbyville Road Plaza.

Ruby, Arizona

Mining, Mayhem, and Murder

In Ruby, Arizona - Mining, Mayhem, and Murder, we present the histories of both the Ruby mining camp and the Montana mine it supported. We "weave" these "threads" chronologically through the life of the mining camp adding anecdotes of the interesting people who affected the mining operation.

Ruby's story is largely the story of the miners, their families, and people who braved the frontier to support them. For many years Ruby was known as Montana Camp, dirt poor and sparsely populated. We portray the challenging life in Montana Camp during Arizona's territorial period to 1912. These "people" stories illustrate almost unbelievable perseverance and optimism.

We recount the stories of two notorious double murders of Ruby general store proprietors by Mexican bandits, first the murders of the Fraser brothers in February 1920, and then the murders of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pearson in August 1921. The history includes not only the crimes, but also the aftermath, the capture of the murderers, dramatic escapes and recaptures, and the murderers' fate. We draw upon previously unpublished Fraser and Pearson family records, including letters and photographs. Trial transcripts add a sobering note to the amazing story.

Suddenly in the 1930s, Ruby became a boomtown of 1,200 people! Our story highlights life in Ruby during the Montana mine's most productive period, when the mine produced more lead and zinc than any other mine in Arizona. We capture recollections of former Ruby residents through personal interviews and oral histories. Wonderful family photographs from this period depict what life in Ruby was really like.

The end of the road for Ruby Road column

By Bob Ring, Al Ring and Tallia Pfirmer Cahoon

Along the Ruby Road

All good things must come to an end. This is the final stop along the Ruby Road for this column. Before going, we wanted to tell you that we have thoroughly enjoyed the last three "plus" years sharing our research on the mining history of Southeastern Arizona.

Because of you, we got a lot out of the experience. Thank you for your interest and constant support.

Since October 2003, the Green Valley News & Sun has published 79 of our columns, with special emphasis on the history of the Montana mine and the ghost town of Ruby, and the fascinating memoir of Ines Fraser, whose husband was brutally murdered in 1920 in the Ruby general store.

We originally offered our column to the Green Valley News & Sun because many of you readers live in or near the places we write about and have an avid interest in the area's history. We thank the Green Valley News & Sun, and especially former Managing Editor Kathy Engle, for recognizing the value of the column and for supporting us for so long.

Over this period, we previewed parts of our first book, "Ruby, Arizona - Mining, Mayhem, and Murder," published in May 2005. Then, in March 2006, we began sharing material for our second book, "Frontier Lady of Letters - the Heroic Love Story of Ines Fraser," that we are getting ready to publish this spring. Writing the column gave us the opportunity and forum to "advertise" our books and become known in the Green Valley community. This of course helped sales of our Ruby book, so we are certainly grateful for that!

Our most important motivation for writing the column, however, was to reach you readers with an appeal to provide additional historical data on the subjects we wrote about. Here, too, we were successful. In several instances, via letter, e-mail, or telephone, you gave us new information or leads to explore. Some of this data came from feedback in occasional lectures that we gave in the Green Valley area. We have always been warmly received by audiences in Southern Arizona and are especially proud of the very positive feedback on this column. Thank you so much to those of you who took the time to contact us.

Tallia Pfirmer Cahoon, who grew up in Ruby during the 1930s, has continued to host Pima Community College's tours of the Ruby ghost town. If you can believe it, Tallia has been doing this since 1994. We'd like to think that this column influenced some of you to sign up on one of Tallia's tours. We do know that the tours are very popular these days and that many of you have told Tallia how much you have enjoyed this column. Thank you for enthusiastically participating in the history of Arizona!

Sparked by family genealogy research, all three of us co-authors are long-time investigators of the history of mining in Arizona's Southeastern borderland area. Bob and Al's paternal grandfather was a mining engineer and he lived and worked in the Ruby area in 1905 and 1906. Tallia's father was chief engineer of the Montana mine's operation in the late 1930s. So we have literally spent years digging for historical facts. This column gave us a place to document our findings and share what we discovered.

Some of our favorite columns detoured from the historical Ruby Road to cover related, special interest or topical subjects. You may remember Bob and Al's exhilaration as we described how we used old family photos to locate the exact spots that our grandfather stood on 100 years ago. We spent two columns relating our struggle to write and self-publish the Ruby book, ultimately succeeding, but picking up many scars along the way. Many of you enjoyed Tallia's account of climbing Montana Peak as a young 73-year-old. Bob and Al appreciated the opportunity to write about our father, Clinton Ring, following his sudden death in late 2005. And all three of us were honored to recognize the wonderful life and contributions to our research of Connie Fraser Kietz, the last child of Ines Fraser, who died in early 2006.

This is our final column, but we are not going to disappear. On this coming April 28, we will be presenting the paper, "In Their Own Words: The Fraser Letters Highlight the Challenge of Early Mining in Borderland Arizona," at the Arizona-New Mexico Joint History Convention at the Hon-Dah Resort in Pine-top Lakeside.

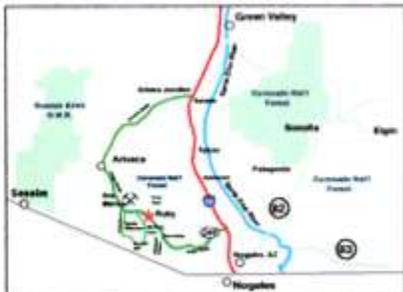

Last December, we debuted our own Web site, www.ring-kietz-history.com. The purpose of the Web site is to keep sharing our research on the mining history of Southeastern Arizona, family genealogy, and the "projects" that have resulted from our work. These projects include books, history papers, newspaper columns, and an extensive collection of historical materials, including thousands of old photographs. Our research and writing will continue, and we will update the web site on a regular basis.

We will also continue to need your support, feedback, and help finding additional data. Please visit our new Web site and let's stay in touch. We will be looking for each of you along the Ruby Road.

Read this personal memoir of Ines Fraser, a touching love story, but also a gripping account of how Ines met incredible challenges. Ines was a woman of tremendous fortitude, whose enthralling life spanned the early gold mining days on the western frontier to the beginning of the manned space program. Ines Fraser made the best of an incredibly difficult existence with her loving husband Jack in crude mining camps in borderland Arizona. Later, after her husband was horribly murdered, she raised her four children alone in San Diego during the Great Depression.

Appreciate Ines as a loving wife and mother. Her dedication to cultural and moral beliefs positively impacted generations that followed. Ines Fraser exhibited the true spirit of early Americans that has made this country so great.

Connect with Ines Fraser the intellectual, who thought deeply about family life, education, politics, and religion. She read a lot. She spent most of her life trying to understand her relationship to the Almighty and exploring daily practices to illuminate and strengthen this relationship. And she expressed her thoughts and opinions wonderfully, first in beautifully composed letters, later in poetry, and finally in scholarly articles for national "thinking persons" publications.

The centerpieces of this literary gold mine are seventy-five extremely personal letters that Jack Fraser wrote to Ines from 1913 to 1919. Many of these historical treasures are included. You will relish the scores of other family letters, old photographs, and examples of Ines's poetry.

the publication of Frontier Lady of Letters - The Heroic Love Story of Ines Fraser. Our previous book, Ruby, Arizona - Mining, Mayhem, and Murder, is a detailed history of the Montana mine and its Ruby camp. That book highlighted the notorious double murder of brothers Jack and Alexander Fraser in the Ruby general store in 1920. We fully described that horrible crime and its aftermath, and introduced Jack's wife, Ines.

The Ines Fraser book is much different from the academic history of Ruby. The new book is a personal memoir, primarily a touching love story, but also a gripping account of how Ines met the incredible challenges of her life.

Former columnists shine with touching personal memoir

By Kathy Engle
Guest Editor: Ines

"Frontier Lady of Letters: The Heroic Love Story of Ines Fraser" is the second book by Bob Ring, Al Ring and Tallia Pfrimmer Cahoon.

Book Review

Their work is familiar to many Green Valley-area readers since the trio wrote a bi-monthly column, "Along the Ruby Road" for the Green Valley News for four years, highlighting the fascinating history of the Oro Blanco Mining District, with emphasis on the mining ghost town of Ruby, the subject of their first book.

Dangerous places

In the second, Ines' story: one of incredible courage and fortitude, is also the story of her husband Jack and their lives in the crude, isolated, and often dangerous mining camps in borderland Arizona. Like many men of his time before and just after the turn of the century, Arizona pioneer Jack Fraser was consumed with gold fever.

He made heroic attempts at prospecting and mining in Alaska and Southern Arizona near what is now the ghost town of Ruby. His struggles to make a living in the mining industry forced many a separation between Jack Fraser and his beloved wife and their children.

Strong bonds

But the bond of love between them was too strong for constant financial uncertainty and Jack's frequent travels to ever break and the couple remained exceptionally close and devoted to the end.

Finally, however, Jack decided to quit the mining game once and for all.

Not only was the mine petering out at the El Oro and Los Alamos mines in Southern Arizona, but the miners faced a growing danger from Mexican revolutionaries and bandits along the international border.

So great was that danger that the 10th Cavalry, known as the "Buffalo Soldiers," began patrols in the Arizona borderlands on a regular basis.

Arizona, near the Frasers' home at Los Alamos, 45 miles southwest of Ruby, quartered one of the military camps established in 1884 to protect the U.S. border with Mexico following Pancho Villa's raid on Columbus, N.M. Jack did get out of the mining business and bought the general store in Ruby in 1908, with his brother Al.

Murdered by bandits

Shortly afterward, he and Al were brutally murdered by two Mexican bandits, a story printed in newspapers around the country because the mine was also an outlet for the U.S. Postal Service.

"Unfortunately," Ines wrote, "most accounts sensationalized the crime beyond reason and conflicting accounts were the rule."

Devastated by his murder, Ines, somewhere found the strength to raise and financially support her four children alone in San Diego during the Depression.

The authors describe their new book as a "personal memoir, primarily a touching love story, but also a gripping account of how Ines met the incredible challenges of her life."

Much of the book is devoted to the personal letters that Jack wrote to Ines from 1913 to 1918. The book also includes other family letters, and photographs, and examples of Ines' poetry.

To the authors and probably to many readers as well "Ines Fraser exhibited the true spirit of early Americans that made this country so great."

Ines was a well-educated woman, who had been a teacher before her marriage and later in life wrote scholarly articles.

While Jack was the great love of her life, she also thought deeply about education, religion, family dynamics, and politics. She spent much her life attempting to understand her relationship with God and exploring ways and means to strengthen and enrich that relationship.

Her thoughts are beautifully expressed in letters, in poetry, and the articles she wrote. Through the book, Ines captures the spirit of the times and the place where she spent her happiest years.

She was an incredibly optimistic woman, content with few luxuries that most now take for granted.

She truly loved Southern Arizona and her insights on life during those times are filled with vivid descriptions of the terrain and simple pleasures, such as riding horseback and cultivating a garden and even helping with the mining by pitching in to build a dam in a shallow wash.

Indeed, Ines proves herself to be the epitome of the frontier woman, who endured innumerable hardships and thrived, achieving "quite contentment."

Readers will enjoy this well-crafted, well-edited memoir that rings authentic and inspirational.

"Frontier Lady of Letters" is published by Wheatmark, which has listed the book on online bookstores, such as Amazon, Barnes & Noble, and Books-A-Million.

The book is paperback at $19.95 is also available from the authors.

article appeared in Voice-Tribune, July 19, 2007, in St. Matthews, Kentucky, where Bob & Al grew up.

If you've lived here for a while, you may remember the 2004 publication of "St. Matthews Firefighters," written by Alan "Al" Ring of the St. Matthews Volunteer Fire Department.

Ring now lives in Tucson, but he has kept on writing. Working with brother Bob Ring and Arizona writer Tallia Pfrimmer Cahoon, he has now written "Frontier Lady of Letters: The Heroic Love Story of Ines Fraser" ($19.95, Wheatmark).

Although many people these days are assembling tales of their ancestors, the story of Ines Chinn Fraser, who was a friend of the Rings' grandparents in the early 1900s, is more intriguing than many others.

It could be called an archetypal American tale, because it follows one family line from dusty, dangerous mining camps of the Old West through the early years of nuclear research.

In 1880, Ines was born in a tent in the brand-new railroad town of Salida, Colo. Twenty-two years later, she met her future husband, Jack Fraser - a man 17 years her senior—who was itching to find his fortune in the Alaskan Gold Rush of 1897-98. His adventures on that rough-and-rascally frontier are worth the price of the book.

The authors gleaned information from 75 letters that have been carefully preserved by the Frasers' descendants; many of the mis-sives begin with salutations such as "My Devine Girl" or "My Honey Girl." However, the authors also used their own previous writings, which include the 2005 book "Ruby, Arizona: Mining, Mayhem and Murder."

Ines and Jack married in 1904 and, a year later, made a new home of in what was then the Arizona Territory.

They hoped to strike gold just above the Mexican border, but instead their life was filled with hardships, including quicksand and days with very little to eat. Jack dryly observed at one point that when one eliminates meat and vegetable from one's diet, "the resultant meal is liable to be sort o' slim."

This article appeared in The Voice-Tribune, July 19, 2007, in St. Matthews, Kentucky, where Bob & Al grew up.

In time, the couple grew desperate for some semblance of prosperity and decided to run the general store in the mining camp at Ruby, located several miles northwest of the Mexican town of Nogales.

Ines gave birth to four children, and Jack insisted that she frequently visit friends in San Diego, Calif., where she could obtain decent medical care. During one of her absences, in 1920, a pair of Mexican robbers entered the camp store and shot Jack and his brother Al, who was his partner in the business.

Al died immediately from a pair of wounds; Jack was struck once and clung to life, but the bullet had gone into an eye and through his skull.

In distant California, Ines received a series of telegrams from the local sheriff, one of which stated "YOUR HUSBAND HERE IN HOSPITAL HE REQUESTS YOU COME AT ONCE RUBY STORE ROBBED HE WAS WOUNDED."

Ines rushed back to Ruby, but the man she had nicknamed "Laddie" had died. With that discovery, she began her long struggle to raise four children on her own. Qualified teaching, the job she had held in Colorado before marrying, she faced the Great Depression and World War II in California with a career, but also with a rebellious daughter and a son who became enthralled by the Socialist movement.

The book ends with a look at what Ines and Jack's descendants have done with their lives, including son-in-law Wilcox Overbeck, who helped produce the first man-made nuclear chain reaction in the 1940s.

Ring Brothers History

Welcome to the Ring Brothers website. We are brothers Bob and Al Ring and the purpose of this website is to share our research on the mining history of south-central Arizona, family genealogy, and the projects that have resulted from our work. These projects include books, history papers, newspaper columns, and an extensive collection of historical materials, including thousands of old photographs. We produced some of these products with our partner, Talla Pittman Carlson, but wish to be appropriate icons on the left (black) or right (purple) to find out more about what we've been up to. Our thing you can count on - our research and writing will continue and we will periodically update this website.

Bob Ring is retired from the aerospace industry, where he worked for 15 years as both a technical contributor and a manager. He completed his aerospace career as a Senior Fellow at Raytheon Missile Systems in Tucson. Bob is a Professional member of the Society of Southwest Authors.

Al Ring was self-employed in Louisville, Kentucky for over 24 years, first in a retail business, then in sales and contracting companies. Spurred by family genealogy research, we are beginning investigations of the history of mining in Arizona's south-central backlands.

We are regular participants at Arizona History Conventions. We've presented papers ranging from the history of Warren, Arizona, a suburb of Hobbs, to the mining history of Oro Blanco and Ruby.

From October 2003 to February 2007, we wrote a bi-monthly newspaper column, "Along the Ruby Road" for the Green Valley News & Sun. The column highlighted the material history of the Oro Blanco Mining District, with emphasis on the mining ghost town, Ruby.

In July 2005, we self-published Ruby, Arizona - Mining, Mayhem, and Murder.

Alexander 'Sandy' Speer: An appreciation of ATL's master stage manager

By Jon Jory • Special to The Courier-Journal • January 16, 2011

Alexander "Sandy" Speer was chief operating officer of Actors Theater of Louisville from 1969, when he was just 25, until his retirement in 2006. He joined the theater company in the fall of 1965. He died Friday.

Sandy Speer had a glass-framed poster from World War II on his office wall opposite his desk. The print read "Loose lips sink ships!" which he fervently believed. After contemplating the poster for 15 or 16 years, I asked him why it was off center on the wall? Sandy looked at me askance and said, "I can see who's in the hall reflected in the glass."

Moral: Sandy Speer sees all. And he did. Sandy collected every shard of information available and then made the decisions that made Actors Theatre of Louisville a national and international power in its field. He was the chess master of arts management.

And boy, did we have fun. We loved our work. We were comrades of the long march. In 32 years we never had an argument, though we did have some icy silences. Sandy's ice could always trump mine.

He protected me artistically and I protected him fiscally. We talked continually at work, wandering in and out of our side-by-side offices sharing insights, doing business, bound by our ambitions for ATL and a shared deeply cynical sense of humor. Actually we never socialized one-on-one outside the building. We'd already done that all day.

Some in the building assumed that Sandy was the bad cop and I was the good cop, which endlessly made us chuckle. He humanized me and talked me down from my revengeful nature with his supreme good sense.

Above all he was a gentleman of the old school. He even taught me what a shrimp fork was. And keep a secret? He was like a bank vault. Oh, and he was a gentleman who knew the value of a dollar, particularly the theater's. I used to go on fund raising sorties with Sandy into corporate offices, but I could never sense what had gone down during the meetings, so Sandy would read the room for me. Correctly. It was like having the world's best translator.

Fiscal intelligence? He had it. He also led me through the complexities of Louisville like an assured tour guide. Without him, and I mean this, I would have been just another garden variety artistic director and ATL just part of the general theater mob.

Sandy was funny, smart, wily, heartfelt, mysterious and he was luckily my best friend, and co-conspirator. I miss a lot of things and people having left Louisville, but mainly I miss walking the 10 feet into Sandy's office and plotting how to be the best damn theater in America — while Sandy checked the poster to see who was in the hall.

Jon Jory was artistic director of Actors Theatre of Louisville from 1969-2000. He now lives in Santa Fe, N.M.

David Stutzenberger to sing in Orient with college group

By Rose Shipp

During the 15th century a group of people known as Madrigals sang songs for entertainment; this was not remarkable in itself except these same people wrote their music, which was sung in contrapoint and close harmony.

The lyrics were simple poems in honor of their queen. It was forbidden in those times to speak the name of the queen so a pseudonym of Orliana was given her. The music resembles chamber music and is performed while sitting around a table.

Since 1939, a Madrigalian group at Peabody College has been performing the same music throughout the country. They have been chosen by the State Department as one of 16 cultural exchange groups to represent the United States abroad.

The 15 member group includes nine women and six men. Dr. Robert Bays the acting director also performs.

David Stutzenberger, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Stutzenberger, 116 Arterburn, is a member.

For the past month the Madrigals have been busy rehearsing, getting passports, shots and taking examinations for an oriental tour.

Sunday, March 15, they flew from Nashville to Los Angeles where they will perform at U.C.L.A. Then they will fly to Japan. After six weeks in Japan they will fly to Hong Kong for 10 days then eight day in Taiwan, and on to Korea for two weeks.

Enroute home, they spend a day and then on to San Francisco.

They are scheduled to perform 100 concerts - 97 in colleges and three for the public. While in Japan they will appear on two national television shows. When the group is not singing, they will conduct workshops in the colleges. An added treat for them in Japan will be the Cherry Blossom Festival.

Homemakers meet

The Lyndon Homemakers met on Tuesday, March 10, at the home of Mrs. H. L. Redmon with Mrs. R. G. Mason as co-hostess. Sixteen members and one visitor were present. Mrs. Frank Moses gave the lesson of life insurance. Guest speaker, Loula Laukful, associate superintendent for administration problems of the Jefferson County Board of Education, talked on school dropouts.

David, just home for the weekend, prepares to leave for the Orient.

Capt. Peters, liaison officer for the academy.

Any young man, age 15 or 16 having the qualifications of physical fitness and scholastic and a cadet may call Capt. Ronald Peters at his home, phone 425-5660.

Success in play

Gerald Jagers, son of Dr. and Mrs. Gerald Jagers of Whipps Mill Road, was a big success in his role for the Trinity Jesuiters in the one act play "Doc Brief."

Gerry played the part of an unsuccessful British murderer. He outacted everyone with his English accent and the dramatic use of his hands.

His portrayal of the character imitated by Fowle (the part he played) was unimpeachable. Gerry is a freshman at Trinity and is interested in law as well as the stage.

The first official game will be held the week of May 24.

Boys, ages five through 19 and girls, age eight years and up are eligible.

There is a need for someone to run the concession stand on the grounds and anyone interested may call Percy Bramlett at 895-2826.

The students at the Kentucky Southern College will celebrate St. Patrick's day with a party at the school on Saturday evening, March 21. Activities will be planned in addition to refreshments and probably some entertainment.
